I am a third-year Humanities (Social Studies) teacher at Boston Green Academy in Brighton, Mass (Boston Public Schools). I teach 10th graders and support them in investigating and interrogating the history of the United States in a course spanning the Industrial Revolution to the present. I completed teacher training at Gardner Pilot Academy in Allston, Mass. and Boston College, where I was a Donovan Urban Teaching Scholar (full scholarship and fellowship).

I am a Mexican-American and a first-generation Ivy League graduate. Before becoming a teacher, I earned a bachelor's degree from Harvard University and worked for several years as a sustainable (green) investing analyst and advocate, a staffer on political campaigns, and a podcast producer.

I was born in Mexico City and raised in central New York. Based in Brighton, Mass., I love running Boston's streets, cheering for Celtics basketball, and caring for my "supermutt" dog Piper.
